There are no holes in my earbuds. They are just plastic. A: It depends on how well the scissors are sharp. It is not impossible, but highly unlikely. If you do cut one, please make sure to clean it out and sterilize it. Most of the time you don't even need to be that careful. Using a regular pair of scissors is pretty much fine as long as you avoid cutting the foam at the tip. No, as long as they don't come into direct contact with your ear. However, don't use your regular scissors. Take a pair of very sharp scissors (I like those $2 ones you can get at the drugstore). Pull the metal clip/stem thing out of the end of the cord and then cut off the rest of the cord (be careful about which end you cut off). Now you should have a stub of cord with a plastic end on one end and a foam plug on the other. You can use a pair of pliers to get the plug off the end of the cord. Then clean the end of the cord with alcohol (don't touch your ears or your eyes) and put it into the end of the other cord. This will help it from getting infected. I've done that a few times, but never without any problems. I used to have a pair of scissors that would cut through anything, which was handy in college, but I usually prefer using a pair of pliers because it gives me a better grip and I can sterilize the scissors between uses. Spatial Working Memory Task, N-back task and Continuous Performance Task (CPT).
